How Tribal Home Visiting Grantees Invested ARPA Funds:

- Provided self care kits to staff
- Honored pandemic work with wage increases or bonuses
- Supported professional development

"The Tribal Home Visiting programs center around the home visitors' work with families. The past three years have taken a toll on their mental and emotional reserves. Well being incentives and reflective supervision materials have been purchased for staff to inspire self care and to show appreciation for their work during COVID. We appreciate our home visitors and the opportunity to show them a little extra support during this trying time."

The Tribal Maternal, Infant, and Early Childhood Home Visiting (TMIECHV) program provides grants to tribal organizations to develop, implement, and evaluate home visiting programs in American Indian and Alaska Native communities. The Tribal Home Visiting program is funded by a six percent set-aside from the larger MIECHV program. Tribal Home Visiting grants are awarded to Indian tribes, consortia of tribes, tribal organizations, and urban Indian organizations. Learn more here.
